VOLUME XIV.

Chicago Tribune

SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1861.

Gen. Fremont's expedition has reached Fort Point, and a good supply of artillery, and these and the troops at Carroll, give a total of some 12,000 to 13,000.

Nothing is heard from Gen. Pillow, but the fact that he has seized the regular pack-train at Columbus, and commands the land communication from New Madrid, will undoubtedly inspire our troops to a sharp look-out, in anticipation of an attack at any moment. With the two armies in such close proximity, and the known desire of Gen. Jackson, for whose especial benefit the rebel movement is being made a battle can hardly be postponed much longer.

The intelligence from Springfield, Mo., is also alarming. Gen. Sigel's force has been reduced to some 4,000 by the return of three months' men, and McCulloch, with knowledge of this fact, is moving northward for "better position."

The rebel plot is rapidly coming to a head in Missouri. Our troops await the onset with unshaken courage, and a purpose to stave for the prestige lost at Manassas. In the interim of the Virginia campaign, the attention of the country is now drawn to the great battle field of the West. And it will not be disappointed.

THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. Lincoln is eminently a good-natured man, but we doubt if he will take the responsibility of the battle of Bull Run, which certain very generous gentlemen are trying to thrust upon him, as kindly as his ample supply of the milk of human kindness might lead him to imagine. We do not mean to say where the blame of the defeat lies, but we think it probable that had the President been in the field, the tendency of the developments to which every day gives birth, is to show that the President is not a man of imagined courage, but a man who has the discretionary power, which he has not the discretion to properly use; and that he is willing to risk the chance of defeat, for the reputation which a victory would bring him, and which he is not willing to run the risk of losing. We think it probable that the President is not a man of imagined courage, but a man who has the
